Big data in health care provided by the National Health Insurance Corporation and the Health Insurance Review and Assessment Service, are being actively used in various fields, including industry and academia.

Particularly, the National Health Insurance Service as a single insurer in the country provides data reflecting the current state of disease morbidity and health care based on medical care services provided. This data also includes health check-up and mortality information that can be used for various purposes.

In this lecture, the current research focused on kidney disorders utilizing data from the National Health Insurance Service will be introduced.
